It was written--while waiting for someone to publish it-- but the publisher flaked out on me. This is not a difficult book; I have pages of notes on it; and that's not the story I wanted to tell. I've been thinking about the manuscript for the last couple of months and I'm coming to the conclusion that the real story is not about how your life gets interrupted, but the fact that you can make time for writing. There are a lot of theories on the purpose of life, but I think that the best theory is this: you live because you say you want to. You write because you say you want to. There's a certain irony in that. And this is when I know that writing is as real a purpose as anything else. I write because it makes me better at everything I do. For the last two months, I've been going to see a book doctor and have been seeing her two or three times a week. It's a low-key, nonprescription treatment that's great for keeping your mind clear. This might be a good time for you to find a book doctor, because you can't write if you don't have a clear head. I have no answers on whether this is curing my depression or not. I don't even know if it's curing my depression. It makes me want to write. And that's what you do. You write.
